Introduction

The passage of four hundred years has done nothing to diminish the interest of the general public in Queen Elizabeth I's vast wardrobe. Her love of new fashions has been generally interpreted as extravagance in dress, but the rich gowns, increasingly elaborate with the passing years, were an essential part of Gloriana's image. As Queen of England she played an intricate political game of matrimonial alliances all over Europe for years. The game's success depended a great deal on her appearance and the illusion of eternal youth.

The Queen's gowns were made of expensive materials, often embroidered and decorated with jewels. A small department of the Great Wardrobe, the Wardrobe of Robes, dealt with orders for her clothes keeping a careful note of deliveries from each store. The Queen's servants would sign their names in various books as they took charge of items, so that it was not often that anything went astray. One of these journals or day books is preserved in the Public Record Office; perhaps it might be more conveniently described as an outward delivery book, as no items entering the Wardrobe are listed. It records jewels lost by the Queen; deliveries of lengths of material to various ladies-in-waiting to make mufflers and other items for the Queen to wear; deliveries of new material or pieces of old gowns to the tailor for the Queen's use; gifts of gowns and other clothing to the ladies-in-waiting, courtiers including the Earl of Leicester, tailor, laundress, Yeoman of the Robes and many others, between 1561 and 1585. A signature beneath almost every item records its safe delivery.

Gifts of used clothing may seem strange to our eyes, but rich and expensive materials were used over and over again as long as they were in good condition.<sup>1</sup> People left items of clothing to friends, relations and servants in their wills and one of the Queen's gowns would have been a most welcome gift to any of her ladies.

The book conjures up a fascinating picture of Elizabeth shedding jewels on her Progresses like some perambulating Christmas tree. Among them were gold and blue enamelled buttons lost at Chartley, gold pansies at Deptford, a small gold acorn and an oak-leaf at Westminster and pearls at Richmond. Occasionally the jewels were recovered, but they must often have been kept as souvenirs by the lucky finders, 'lost from her majesties back'.

MARY SCUDAMORE AND THE DAY BOOK

The Public Record Office catalogue entry tells us that the day book (the Duchess of Norfolk Deeds, MS C/115/L2/6697) came there with other documents originally at Holme Lacy, Herefordshire, part of the Duchess of Norfolk's estate, in the middle of the last century. References are made to several items in this MS book (e.g., nos. 10, 51, 53, 74, 145, 176, 268, 320 and 357) by Agnes Strickland in her Life of Queen Elizabeth. She acknowledges the source as 'an ms wardrobe book belonging to Sir Thomas Phillipps Bart' in the collection at Middle Hill. It seems likely that there were duplicate books, one probably kept in the Office of the Wardrobe of Robes, which later passed into the Phillipps library, and this copy at Court, as there seems to be no indication that it was ever at Middle Hill.

How did the book pass from the safekeeping of the Wardrobe of Robes to the Norfolk Estate? It was probably taken from Court by Mary Scudamore, one of the Gentlewomen of the Privy Chamber. Among other papers kept with it at Holme Lacy was a MS Book of Arrears within the circuit of John Scudamore, King's Receiver in Staffordshire, Shropshire, Herefordshire and Worcestershire, dating from 1545-6. This John Scudamore of Holme Lacy and Wilton, Herefordshire, was father of Sir John, Mary Scudamore's husband (1540-1623). Sir John was a Gentleman Usher to Queen Elizabeth I, standard bearer to the Pensioners, M.P. 1571-89 and High Sheriff of Herefordshire in 1581.

Sir John's first wife, Eleanor Croft, died in 1569. He married secondly Mary Shelton, second cousin and Gentlewoman of the Privy Chamber to Elizabeth; Holme Lacy was their family home. Mary's marriage was made without the consent of the Queen, a breach of etiquette, particularly since she was a distant relation. Eleanor Bridges, a Lady of the Privy Chamber, wrote to the young Earl of Rutland 'The Queen hath used Mary Shelton very ill for her marriage: she hath dealt liberal both in blows and words . . . No one ever bought her husband more dearly'<sup>2</sup>. The secret wedding apparently took place in January 1574<sup>3</sup>. The Queen had probably got used to the idea of the marriage by October, as there is a gift of a forepart to 'Mrs Mary Skydmore' (no. 179), but John Scudamore was not knighted until 1596.

Mary Scudamore's name and signature appear frequently in the day book. At some time shortly before July 1586, when Sir Thomas Gorges took over the responsibility for the safe keeping of the contents of the Wardrobe of Robes from Ralph Hope and John Roynon, a Commission was appointed, to at least two of whose members all acquittances, bills or books 'subscribed with handes or markes of the parties receyvinge the said Robes garmentes apparell Silkes Jewells & other stuff' were to be shown<sup>4</sup>. This day book would have been checked then and was probably returned to Mary Scudamore in her capacity as one of the Gentlewomen of the Privy Chamber with the intention of continuing to record items lost or leaving the Wardrobe of Robes at Court in the same way. Sir Thomas Gorges may have decided to reorganise the arrangements and start new books. This would account for the last entries being in June 1585 and the large number of blank pages. Mary Scudamore probably took the book home with her, perhaps intending to use these empty sheets of paper. After her death in 1603 it apparently remained at Holme Lacy until 1817, by which time the property had become part of the Dowager Duchess of Norfolk's estate.

The Public Record Office catalogue entry explains the descent of the property. James, 3rd Viscount Scudamore of Holme Lacy and his wife Frances, only daughter and heiress of Simon, 4th Baron Digby, had an only daughter, also Frances (b. 1711, d. 1750), who married Henry, 3rd Duke of Beaufort. This marriage ended in divorce in 1744. Frances then married secondly Charles Fitzroy, the 1st Duke of Grafton's natural son, who adopted the name of Scudamore. Their daughter Frances, born in 1750, was married to Charles Howard, 11th Duke of Norfolk and inherited Holme Lacy. When the Duke of Norfolk died on 16 December, 1815, Frances was a lunatic and therefore incapable of controlling the estate.

On 27 April, 1816, a Commission of Lunacy was issued and the Lord Chancellor subsequently made an Order on 22 June, 1816, instructing John Springett Harvey, Master of the Court of Chancery, to recommend 'committees of the person and estate of the Dowager Duchess of Norfolk to make provision for her maintenance and appoint Receivers'. This Order instructed Thomas Braithwaite, Steward to the Duchess, to employ Thomas Bird, solicitor, to make an inventory of all the deeds and papers in his possession and 'A Schedule of Deeds, Books, Papers and Writings' was duly compiled. The documents were numbered, tied into bundles, boxed and deposited in Harvey's office in 1817.

The method of numbering the deeds and papers in the Schedule was different from that in A Catalogue of the MSS in the possession of His Grace the Duke of Norfolk at Home Lacy in the County of Hereford. The day book was numbered L.2/6697 for the Schedule reference and B.3 for the Catalogue reference. Apparently Thomas Bird stated that 'this volume has been included because it is marked B.3 although no such reference was shown in the Catalogue.' It is not clear whether the MS was considered to be of insufficient importance to list in the catalogue, or if details were omitted by accident. On the death of the Duchess in 1820 the estates devolved on her heirs-at-law and the deeds and papers apparently remained in the Chancery until their transfer to the Public Record Office in the middle of the last century.

THE RECORD OF GIFTS AND LOST JEWELS

It is not certain if similar books were kept before 1561 but it seems likely that they would have continued to be kept after 1586 when Sir Thomas Gorges was appointed Gentleman of the Robes. Prior to 1561 there may only have been separate lists for each year, which were copied into the warrants. One warrant for gifts of clothing dating from 1561 was printed in The Gentleman's Magazine and Historical Chronicle in 1754<sup>5</sup>. It included eleven entries delivered by John Roynon and Ralph Hope, Yeomen of the Wardrobe of Robes, 'by our commandement oute of their custodie and charge, att divers and sundry tymes, all suche parcell of stuff by us gevon to sundry persons whose names ensue as more playnelye hereafter doth appere'. The eighth entry, 'Item, Gevon to Elizabeth Sloo, oone gowne of black pinked vellat, borderid aboute with thre swelling welts cutt and raved, lyned with taphata and edgid with a frence', appears as the first entry in the day book printed here, where it is noted as being entered in this warrant, which was signed on 16 May; all other entries for 1561 are after this date.

Many more gifts were probably being made by the Queen as her wardrobe increased in size and for this reason records were kept in book form for easy reference from 1561 onwards. There was certainly one other book which recorded outward deliveries and gifts from the Tower of London store<sup>6</sup>. Although no other books seem to have survived, there would probably have been one for every store, new ones being started in 1586, with duplicate copies of each kept in the Office of the Wardrobe of Robes. The record of gifts of clothing printed here is therefore not a complete one; entries noting others may be found elsewhere. For example, a warrant to George Brideman dated 28 March, 1572, ordered him to 'Delyver to Charles Smyth Page of our Robes Fourtene yardes of Murrye damaske to be employde in making of a Night gowne for the Erle of Leycester. And two hole pecis of Crymesen silk chamlet stryped with golde, the one conteyning xxx<sup>ii</sup> yardes iij quarters di, and the other xxx<sup>ii</sup> yardes quarter di, to make Fraunces Howard and Elyzabeth Knolles of our privie chamber eyther of them a trayne gowne'<sup>7</sup>. None of these gifts are listed in the day book; George Brideman was in charge of the store at the Palace of Westminster, so these items would have been entered there.

The gifts range from Robes of the Most Noble Order of the Garter sent to foreign royalty and furs for the Earl of Leicester, to a worn out black velvet night gown taken by Ralph Hope for part of his winter fees. One rather mysterious gift of three and a half yards of russet satin to make a doublet for the Steward of the Cardinal of Chatillon's house (no. 130) may be explained as a payment for service to the state in spying on his master. In April 1569 Killigrew wrote to Sir William Cecil that 'Sir H. Norreys had a packet intercepted in which there were letters to the Cardinal of Chatillon, since which time he is straightly looked unto'<sup>8</sup>.

As we have seen, the day book does not give a complete record of the Queen's gifts to the women who served her. Of those listed some of the gowns and lengths of material, which were later made up by the Queen's tailor for the recipients, were livery given in part payment for their services. Kirtles and gowns for livery were normally made of russet velvet or satin, guarded with black velvet. There are also some entries of lengths of black velvet and satin for gowns which may have been livery<sup>9</sup>. Other gowns, with more embroidery and decorative features which are described in detail, belonged to the Queen; in some cases they had been presented to her as gifts. These were frequently newly lined or completely remodelled for the ladies to whom they were given<sup>10</sup>. Sometimes garments were presented without any alterations for the recipients to use as they wished. One of the Queen's petticoats in green patterned velvet was given to Lady Drury to cut up for a gown for her little daughter Frances (no. 278). Two beautiful petticoats 'called Opall', which probably meant that they had a milky iridescent sheen like an opal, were also unaltered when they were given to Mary Scudamore in January 1579 (no. 284). The second one had been lined with crimson sarsenet in 1575<sup>11</sup>.

When a gown was due to be discarded, the Queen and her ladies may have discussed among themselves who would be the most suitable recipient for the gift. On one occasion the consent of the Gentlewomen of the Privy Chamber was obtained before an Irish gentlewoman was presented with an orange velvet safeguard, an orange satin doublet and a pair of ash colour satin sleeves, so presumably the clothes had already been given to these ladies to dispose of (no. 362).

On a few occasions the Queen may have changed her mind about gifts, as some items in the day book have been deleted. A French gown of cloth of gold with crimson velvet welts was apparently given by the Queen's commandment to Elizabeth Drury on 16 December 1574, but the entry was cancelled (no. 184). The same gown is listed again on 20 January 1575 so the Queen decided to give it away after all (no. 186).

The series of lost jewels entered from time to time would appear to have been copied from various memoranda made while on Progresses, as they are often followed by a few gowns and other items at Court with earlier delivery dates. The Queen's personal jewels were the responsibility of various ladies-in-waiting and the date and place of each loss were carefully recorded. Few pieces of clothing seem to have been mislaid in spite of all the travelling about on Progresses. One item, part of a gown which had formerly belonged to Queen Mary<sup>12</sup>, was used with other pieces of her clothing in a play at Oxford and afterwards could not be found (no. 61); Ralph Hope, the Yeoman of the Robes who was in charge of these costumes, may not have been used to dealing with the players.

The constant succession of gifts of clothing presented to the Queen recorded in the New Year's Gift Rolls and the clothes made each year by her tailors, first Walter Fyshe, then William Jones, must have taken up a great deal of storage space; it is not surprising that Elizabeth gave so many things away. Although an incomplete record, the day book gives us an insight into the careful organisation of the Wardrobe of Robes. It also helps to give us a more balanced picture of Queen Elizabeth's so-called extravagance in dress.

NOTES

1. See J. Arnold 'The Coronation Portrait of Queen Elizabeth I', in The Burlington Magazine, CXX, (November 1978), pp. 728-9 for the re-use of the Robes of Estate, first worn by Queen Mary in 1553, at Elizabeth's coronation in 1559.
2. H. M. C. Rutland. Quoted in Elizabeth Jenkins, Elizabeth the Great (1958), p. 225. Eight years later, when the story was told to the Queen of Scots by the Countess of Shrewsbury, the Queen had broken Mary Scudamore's finger and had given it out that the injury was caused by a falling candlestick (ibid). If there is any truth in this story it may be that Mary Scudamore was holding a lighted candle when the Queen gave her a sharp push and, in falling awkwardly, dislocated a finger.
3. Jenkins, op. cit., gives January, but the year as 1576. However, a button lost by the Queen on August 26, 1574, was listed as a gift from Mary Scudamore, so this would seem to be the correct year.
4. Full details are given in my forthcoming book Queen Elizabeth's Wardrobe Unlock'd, to be published by Macmillan.

Editor's Note on the Transcription

The editorial principles governing the transcription of the following manuscript were adopted with the primary aim of presenting the material as clearly and economically as possible. Recent rises in the cost of paper, typesetting and proof reading make any attempt at following the original layout of the manuscript prohibitive; photographic reproductions of the original manuscripts can in any case be obtained relatively cheaply by those who wish to study handwriting and the finer linguistic details. A completely modernised version of the transcription, involving the normalisation of spelling, capitalisation and punctuation appropriate for some historical documents would have removed the variations in spelling of technical and other terms which are of significance to costume and textile historians. A compromise has therefore been reached which I hope will meet the demands of general readers as well as those with a particular interest in costume, embroidery design or textiles.

SPELLING

I have retained the original spelling throughout, silently extending most abbreviations and contractions; in almost all cases the word is given in full by the same scribe in another part of the manuscript and where there are variations in the spelling the most common form has been used. A certain number of normalisations have been adopted for the ease of the reader. It is, perhaps, unnecessary to explain that certain letters, for example u and v, i and j, i or ie and y, c and t, were interchangeable at this period. I have resorted to modern usage with u and v for eyes accustomed to the distinction between the vowel and the consonant, thus 'euery' is given as 'every'. I have also distinguished between i and j so that, for example, 'Maiestie' is shown as 'Majestie'. There seemed to be less of a problem with the interchangeable i or ie and y, and I have therefore left words like 'ladie', 'sylke', 'wyre' in their original form.

The c/t interchange occurs in words like 'carnation' which also appears as 'carnacion' and in its contracted form 'carnacon'. I have silently extended all such contractions, and left any alternative spellings, thus 'facon' is extended to 'facion' and is left as 'fasshyon' where written in this form. One common contraction still in use today, the ampersand, &, has been retained. M<sup>r</sup> for Master is printed as Mr and silently extended when used for a title e.g., Master of the Great Wardrobe. M<sup>rs</sup>, M<sup>ris</sup>, M<sup>res</sup> for Mistris, Mistress is printed as Mrs, retaining the word when given in full, with all the variations of spelling. S<sup>r</sup>, sometimes written Syr, is silently extended and printed as Sir. Kt is printed as Knight and Ma<sup>tie</sup> as Majestic, retaining any alternative spellings as 'magyste', 'maygestie'. L, L, L<sup>a</sup>, L<sup>ship</sup>, H<sup>o</sup> are silently extended as appropriate to Lord, Lordship, Lady, Ladie, Ladyship, Honour. Other common contractions are A<sup>o</sup>, printed as Anno, and dd, delivered.

PUNCTUATION

Entries in the manuscript are written by a number of different hands, and are virtually unpunctuated except for occasional commas, full stops and virgules. By the sixteenth century the latter stand for commas in the middle of a sentence and as full stops at the end of a section, so they have been shown in the modern form. Capital letters have been left as originally written. Readers who find it difficult to understand the sense in some places may easily recover the sixteenth century meaning by reading the entry aloud. Christian names and surnames represented as initials or abbreviations have usually been left in this form. Where they are extended this is done in square brackets e.g., Brod[belt].

NUMERALS AND DATES

Roman numerals are mainly used in the MS. The use of iiij, viiiij and xxxix for iv, ix and xl is common. Abbreviations of numbers vary between Latin and English, so that 'tenth' may be written as x<sup>o</sup> (decimo) or xth (tenth). The dates of the entries can be confusing. Most of them give the regnal year (usually written Anno RRE or Anno Regni Reginae Elizabethae) or, occasionally, the Julian Old Style calendar date, when 25th March was the first day of the New Year. The first regnal year began on 17th November 1558 and ended on 16th November 1559. To avoid confusion the Gregorian New Style date, when 1st January is the first day of the New Year, is given in square brackets for each dated entry.

TABLE OF MEASURES

Among the entries are lengths of cloth. One abbreviation in general use is di, dim, dimidio – a half.

Measures

1 nail	=	2 $\frac{1}{4}$ inches
1 inch	=	2.54 cm
36 inches	=	1 yard = 91.44 cm
45 inches	=	1 English ell

Parts of one yard

di quarter	=	$\frac{1}{8}$ yard
quarter	=	$\frac{1}{4}$ yard
quarter di	=	$\frac{3}{8}$ yard
di	=	$\frac{1}{2}$ yard
di di quarter	=	$\frac{5}{8}$ yard
iiij quarters	=	$\frac{3}{4}$ yard
iiij quarters di	=	$\frac{7}{8}$ yard

KEY TO SIGNS IN THE TRANSCRIPT

I have avoided using (sic) and making many comments in the text. It is helpful to read difficult words with strange spelling aloud, as they are usually phonetic. In some cases where I think the sense may be obscure I have put my interpretation in square brackets.

The beginning of each folio and its reverse side in the manuscript is marked in the text following the method used in the original, f1, f2, f3.

[gowne]	=	Interpolation by the editor to fill an omission by the scribe and in some few cases for the purposes of clarification.
p(ur)le	=	Resolution of abbreviations and contractions used where there may be alternative solutions.

- ((greene)) = Material deleted in the manuscript, usually by the original scribe.
- {red} = Words about which there is some doubt in transcription. In some cases the ink is too faint to be seen clearly, even with the aid of ultra violet light, in others the writing is very poor or the manuscript is damaged.
- [[black]] = Additions by the original scribe and other hands in the main text of the manuscript.
- (petticoat) = Ordinary brackets used in the manuscript by the original scribe.
- (....) = Illegible letters, the approximate number of which is shown by the dots.
- NAE = Note above entry
- NBE = Note below entry
- LMN = Left margin note
- RMN = Right margin note
- Apr' (Aprilis) = The apostrophe is used where the writer has omitted what might be a Latin inflexion ending and where there is no way of determining which of two or more possible endings the writer had in mind.

DESCRIPTION OF THE DAY BOOK OF THE WARDROBE OF ROBES IN THE PUBLIC RECORD OFFICE, THE DUCHESS OF NORFOLK'S DEEDS MS C115/L2/6697

The book, 29.8 cm (11 $\frac{3}{4}$ " ) x 20.9 cm (8 $\frac{1}{4}$ " ), with the original vellum cover, which is doubled in for extra stiffness at top and bottom, has another vellum flap inside the cover as part of the binding. The inscription on the cover is very faint. The spine is reinforced with parchment strips and sewn with thick linen thread. The paper is watermarked with an open hand, a five-petalled flower at the tip of the middle finger, a crescent moon (?) on the palm attached to a wrist-band with the initials RB marked on it. The pages of the MS are scored with lines as a guide for writing. The book has several rough scribbles at the front made by a scribe testing a new pen. At the back of the book, after 296 blank pages, there are some rough notes which were made in the Office of the Wardrobe of Robes.

Entries in the manuscript are in a number of different hands. Most of the signatures seem to be those of the people accepting the deliveries, although some are not; for example item 7, signed for Dorothy Broadbelt, has a margin note to this effect. Items 21 and 24 are signed by two different hands, the first as 'Katheryn asteleye,' the second as 'Kateryn Asteley', but it seems likely that both were deliveries to the same person. Some of the signatures are printed in capital letters, as is that of Ralph Hope, Yeoman of the Robes, for item 56. Others are little more than a mark, as for example the almost illegible initials beneath item 15, apparently written by Elizabeth Marbery, a Gentlewoman of the Bed-chamber.

Glossarial Index

The definitions for this list of terms which occur in the MS and need comment have been prepared from a variety of contemporary MSS and books, particularly John Minsheu A Guide into the Tongues (1617), also M. C. Linthicum, Costume in the Drama of Shakespeare and his contemporaries (1936) and the Oxford English Dictionary. The modern spelling is given before each definition, and one or more references given for entries in the MS.

- Aglet, 76. The metal tag of a lace (formerly called a point) intended primarily to make it easier to thread through eyelet holes, but afterwards also as an ornament to the pendent ends.
 Ballan, 313. Probably ballas (balas); a delicate rose red variety of the spinel ruby.
 Barde, 23, 69, 374. Barred; striped.
 Baudekin, 94. Silk fabric woven with metal threads, less expensive than cloth of gold and silver. Minsheu (1617) gives 'baudkin, or tinsell'. The name is said to have been derived from Baldacco, the Italian form of Baghdad.
 Bayes, 249. Bays; a napped material, half worsted, with a warp of combed wool.
 Bewgles, 37, 210. Bugle; a tube-shaped glass bead, frequently black, used to ornament wearing apparel.
 Billament lace, 54. Biliment lace; a type of braid, probably term used originally for braid for French hoods and other head-dresses. See bylement.
 Bone lace, 117. Lace made with bobbins, of gold, silver, silk and linen thread.
 Brouche, 282. Brooch.
 Burgonyon gardes, 2. Burgundian guards; presumably guards made in Burgundy or purchased from a merchant of Burgundy. See gardes.
 Buttons, broken, 112. Buttons were used for decoration as well as fastenings. The knob of a tassel was also described as a button in accounts of Garter and other ceremonial robes. See also jewels.

 Byas, 200, 207. Bias, cut on the cross grain of the material; arranged diagonally.
 Bylement, 63. Biliment (billiament, habilliament); the attire or ornaments of a woman's head or neck, according to Baret's Alvearie (1580). Seems to have been used most often for the jewelled decorations on French hoods.

- Byrall, 120. Material used for gowns, exact variety unknown.
 Callaber, 48. Type of fur apparently obtained from some species of the squirrel.
 Calloper, 5. See callaber.
 Cappe band, 240. Cap band; band or narrow ribbon put round a cap above the brim.
 Cawl, 314. Caul; a net for the hair.
 Certell, 17. See kirtle.
 Chamlett, 151. Camlet; probably the name for a ribbed weave, today called repp, not a term to describe material made from a particular fibre since silk, camel's hair and wool were all used for camlet in the sixteenth century.
 Changeable taffeta, 168. Shot silk, the warp and weft of different colours.
 Cheverne, 107. Chevron; arranged in the manner of a chevron; a zig-zag pattern.
 Cheyne lace, 56. Chain lace; type of braid, which might be made by the tailor.
 Compas, 69. Circular shape.
 Conney, 153. Coney; rabbit.
 Cotton, 280. Cotton was imported from the Levant priced at 6d per yard (1586) and is listed in Wardrobe warrants for lining doublets.
 Crowne lace, 155, 205, 278. Crown lace; possibly a type of braid priced at one crown for a certain quantity or the word 'crown' may describe the design. In nautical terms 'to crown a knot' means to interweave the strands of a rope to prevent it untwisting.
 Dyse, 280. Dice; ornamental pattern of cubes or squares.
 Este, esse, 161, 174, 312. See SS.
 Face, 5. Set of furs, possibly intended for a gown front facings.
 Fagerd, 152. Figured (?); ornamented with patterns woven in the material or possibly from 'fag', a knot in the cloth, thus meaning 'textured with knots'.

 Fagottes, 215. Faggot; a bundle or bunch.
 Fearest, 364. Fairest.
 Flanders gown, 70. Probably a type of loose gown with decorative guards.
 Forehead clothes, 40. Forehead cloth; a triangular piece of material to tie over the hair above the forehead, usually with matching coif.
 Forepart, 7, 179, 219. The front part of any piece of dress as 'the forepart of a sleeve' or 'the forepart of a kirtle'; when used alone 'the forepart' usually refers to the detachable inverted V-shaped panel worn to fill in the open front of the gown between waist and hem.
 Forequarters, 266. Front part.
 French gown, 90. Possibly a gown with a square neckline, fitting bodice and full skirt sweeping the ground at the back. The name seems to have originated as a fashion from France in the early sixteenth century.
 Freng, 4. Fringe.
 Fustian, 10. Material with a linen warp and cotton weft, with a soft fleecy surface.
 Gardes, 64. Guards; ornamental borders or bands of trimming on a garment. Originally a reinforcement to keep the edge of the cloth from fraying.
 Garter robes: Charles IX, King of France, 28; Emperor Maximilian, 66; Frederick II, King of Denmark, 355.
 Gown sent out of France, 290. A gown made in France, possibly sent by an Ambassador.
 Habilliamentes, 96. See Bylement.
 Hearn, 355. Herm; a statue composed of a head, usually that of the god Hermes, placed on top of a four-sided pillar, of the proportions of the human body.
 Heare colour, 345. Hair colour; bright tan.
 Hoddes, houtes, hoodes, 25, 96, 138, 143. Hoods; probably French hoods, a fashionable style of headdress, rather than loose hoods of the type attached to a cloak. The hoods entered for the Garter robes are examples of crystallised fashion from the medieval period, for ceremonial use only.
 Hooks and eyes, 350. Fastenings made of wire.

Italian fashion, 290. Apparently a gown with two bodices, the top one slashed in long cuts.
 Jewels, lost (including aglets and buttons). 45, 51-3, 64, 71-2, 74, 76-8, 80, 87-90, 92-3, 119, 121, 125-8, 139-142, 145, 158, 160-76-8, 80, 166, 167, 169, 172-7, 180-3, 189-94, 197, 199, 201-2, 1, 164, 166, 167, 169, 172-7, 180-3, 189-94, 197, 199, 201-2, 221, 223-6, 229-30, 232-8, 240-1, 243, 246, 248, 257, 260, 268, 270-1, 293-7, 299-301, 308, 310-12, 320, 328, 334-7, 339, 341, 343, 348-52, 356-8, 364-5, 372.
 Kersey, 122. Light weight, narrow woollen cloth in many colours, costing from one to three shillings a yard. Probably manufactured originally at Kersey, Suffolk.
 Kirtle, 252. A gown usually worn with an overgown, as the bodices were often made with different material at the back and were obviously not intended to be seen.
 Knytwerke, 180. Knitwork; knitted material.
 Kyrtell, 9, 86. See kirtle.
 Lace, 28, 120, 261. Term for cords or strings to fasten a garment, also decorative braids, made by intertwining a number of silk, gold (i.e., silver-gilt) and/or silver threads together. See bone lace, crowne lace, cheyne lace and pomett lace.
 Launde, 30. Lawn; very fine light-weight linen material.
 Loose gown, 67. Overgown hanging loosely from the shoulders, not fitting tightly to the body.
 Lowpes, 48. Loops.
 Luzarnes, 5. Lucern; the fur of the lynx.
 Marchautes welt, 184. Merchant's welt; probably a narrow embroidered strip of material purchased ready-made for decorating a gown.
 Mofflers, 63. See mufflers.
 Moufflers, 131. See mufflers.
 Mufflers, 188. A scarf or kerchief worn by women in the 16th and 17th centuries to cover part of the face and neck.
 Murrey, 29. Mulberry colour, dull purplish red.
 Night gown, 111. Long over-gown, worn for warmth both indoors and out.
 Parcell, 348, 349. One of a group.
 Partlett, 210. Partlet; a small yoke piece to cover a low neckline, often richly decorated and usually in the same material as the gown. When made of lawn, partlets were worn to fill in the neckline, as a chemisette or habit-shirt.

Passamayne lace, 116. Type of braid, exact variety unknown.
 Petycoate, 149, 284. Petticoat; a skirt or underskirt, usually richly decorated and intended to be seen.
 Pinked, 1. Small cuts on the surface of a fabric, giving a decorative pattern.
 Point, 310. See aglet.
 Pomaunder buttons, 127. Pomander buttons; pomander was a mixture of aromatic substances rolled into a ball and open-work metal containers were given the same name. Small pieces of scented cottonwool might have been used instead of pomander, tucked inside filigree buttons.
 Pomett lace, 6. Type of braid, exact variety unknown.
 Powts, 10. Possibly pieces or paws.
 Preaste harts, 220. Pressed hart; a hunted stag falling back on its haunches preparatory to making a leap.
 Prynted, 154, 271. Printed; pattern impressed on silks, particularly satin and velvet, with hot irons.
 Purled lace, 122. Braid with a row of minute loops or twists on the edge.
 Ragged staves, 207. A ragged staff; an untrimmed stick with projecting stumps used for the badge or crest of the Earl of Warwick.
 Raste, 79, 205. Rased (razed); pattern given to the surface of satin by scraping it with a sharp knife, cutting some warp threads only.
 Raveled, 1, 7. Ravelled; threads pulled loose at the edges of a cut for a decorative finish.
 Remnant, 85. The material remaining after a piece of any size is cut off the length.
 Rewyed, 284. Rowed; set in rows, striped or ribbed.
 Reyzyd, 123. Raised; the velvet pile standing above the ground, giving a raised pattern. This term is also used to describe padded embroidery.
 Ruft, 22, 263. Ruffed; gathered or wrinkled.
 Ruffes, 22. Evenly spaced gathers which would be called 'cart-ridge pleats' today.
 Sables, 264. Light or mid-brown fur of Mustela Zibellina, nearly allied to the marten. The fur may have been very dark brown or black in the sixteenth century.
 Sarceonet, 6. Sarsenet; light-weight silk frequently used for linings.

Saufeguard, 115, 255. Safeguard; an outer skirt or petticoat worn by women to protect their dress when riding.
 Sipers, 80. Cypress; a light transparent material of silk and linen.
 Sleeve silk, 58. Sleeve-silk; silk thread capable of being separated into smaller filaments for use in embroidery.
 Snypt at the edge, 2. Snipped at the edge; a decorative finish given by cutting at intervals into a folded edge of material.
 Sops-in-wine, 369. Possibly pink or pink and white mottled spots on a wine ground. Gillyflowers of one sort (Dianthus Caryophyllus, Clove Pinks) were put in wine to flavour it, according to Chaucer and other writers, and thus were given the name 'sops-in-wine'. Alternatively the satin may have been patterned with pink spots or rings on a white ground, imitating the shapes of gillyflowers rather than the effect of flowers floating in wine.
 Spanish sleeve, 124, 158. Style of sleeve, apparently originating in Spain, with an outer seam curving in to a narrow wrist. The front seam was left open so that it could be worn as a hanging sleeve.
 SS, 161, 174, 312. Esses; the letters SS were used for the livery collar of the house of Lancaster in the fifteenth century. After the reigns of the Yorkist kings, when the collar of SS was out of favour, Henry VII restored its use. It is still worn today by Kings of Arms, the Lord Mayor of London and others. The use of esses, or SS, in the design of some of Elizabeth's jewels suggests that A. Purey Cust's theory that S stands for 'Soverayne' may well be correct. See este, esse.
 Streight bodied gown, 120. Strait bodied gown; made with a narrow, tight-fitting bodice.
 Sypher, 189. Cipher; monogram.
 Tagges, 341, 343. Tags; see aglet.
 Trewlove pearl, 314. Truelove pearl; probably truelove's knots made of pearls.
 Tuft taphata, 2. Taffeta woven with tufts of silk.
 Tyncell, 85. Tinsel; silk woven with metal threads, silver or gold (i.e., silver-gilt). See baudekin.
 Typpet, 133. Tippet; fur neck-piece.
 Unshorne vellat, 44. Unshorn velvet; usually understood to mean velvet with the looped pile uncut, but perhaps cut velvet with a fairly long pile which had not been shorn to make it even.

 Vale, 180, 181, 182. Veil; a thin cloth or silk head covering worn by women, also used to describe a loose mantle or gown with sleeves, when made of very light material.
 Venice gold, 82. Apparently gold (silver-gilt) thread imported from Venice.
 Verthingale, 65. Farthingale; a cone-shaped underskirt stiffened with hoops of rope, bents or whalebone.
 Watchet, 149. Light blue or greenish blue.
 Weltes, 1, 15. Welts; narrow bands of material put on a gown for decoration, apparently narrower than guards.
 Whodde, 28. See hodde.
 Wings, 111. Small pieces of material cut in a curved shape, usually stiffened, set over the top of the sleeves of doublet or gown.
 Winter fee gown, 298. Gown given in part payment of wages due during the half year September to March.
 Wreethes, 178. Wreaths; coils of satin in a circular form.
 Wrought velvet, 5. Decorated, probably woven with a pattern, possibly embroidered.

Index of Names

All those known to be Maids of Honour or Ladies and Gentlewomen of the Privy Chamber and Bedchamber attending on the Queen, at one time or another, are marked thus *; their married names are given where possible. It is very easy to confuse ladies with the same surname since christian names are not always given, as for example, with some of the Howards and the Staffords; their relationship to each other, if any, is not always clear. Positions held at Court by other recipients of gifts are noted where known.
